Our Beligious Column. THE RESURRECTION.

There is a convict in the Massachusetts State Penitentiary who is likely to become famous as an author. Since his confinement he has written one of the most elequent and remarkable descriptions of the life of Christ, which has yet appeared. It is a book of 300 pages, and the following extract from the chapter on the description gives but a partial idea of Resurrection, gives but a partial idea of some of the beautiful pen-sketches it

The dawning of the third day after the crucifixion was looked for with fervent and hopeful solicitude by the apostles. The time dragged slowly and heavily at they watched for the last prophecy of Christ: "After three days I shall rise again." Twice had the sun gone down on earth and all a continuous general and the same management, prudence and integrity, which have served to raise it to its again. Twice had the sun gone down on earth, and all as yet was quiet as the sepulchre. Death held his scepter over the son of God.
